I found lots of example of how to plot multiple lines but I have no idea how to make it with my data. How do I make it look like the following? A: These should be done in one go as I'm not sure of how well matplotlib will handle 3 separate subplots in the same graph... So here is a function that does it all in one go:

import matplotlib.pyplot as plt import numpy as np from matplotlib.collections import LineCollection @np.vectorize def add_lines(x, y, t, data, color=None): x_array = np.array(x) y_array = np.array(y) # If all your data is of the same size then you could do this... # x_array = np.array([x_array, x_array, x_array, x_array, x_array]) if len(x_array)!= len(t):raise ValueError("Series sizes must be equal") lines = LineCollection( data=np.array([x_array, y_ b7e8fdf5c8

Khalilzad, U.S. special representative for peace in Afghanistan, has visited about 30 countries in an attempt to end the nearly 18-year-old war, with the Taliban seeking to get U.S. troops to leave the country and the United States wanting to get the insurgents to accept a political settlement. The official said the latest round of talks began on October 17, and there was no meeting between officials until October 20, when the head of the Taliban delegation, deputy chief Mohammad Rasoul. "Nothing was going on until yesterday, when the main Taliban figures showed up," the U.S. official said. Last month, two Taliban leaders were killed and several others were arrested in Afghanistan after they were caught trying to infiltrate the country with the help of the U.S. and Afghan intelligence services. The U.S. official declined to comment on the Taliban's latest talks with U.S. officials in Doha, but the official said the Taliban's delegation was there for a third time. "The only reason to go to Doha to meet U.S. officials twice is if you're trying to start your negotiations with the United States
